To become educators, parents need skills and knowledge to help them understand and strengthen their children's character through the different stages of life.

Each FEA course aims to assist couples to:

- Understand that they are the primary educators of their children.
- Help their children form good behavioural, emotional, and intellectual habits while they are at their most receptive stage of development.
- Use the information provided to learn to reflect to analyse situations and to make objective decisions in educating their children.
- Set appropriate educational goals for each of their children according to their ages.
- Communicate effectively between themselves about each child's development.
- Discover how to observe and foster the unique development of each child's character.
- Recognise positive sources of educational information and influences.
- Share ideas and experiences with other parents.

Parents are educators through their personal relationships within the family.

Each course involves six (6) sessions delivered by FEA trained moderators.

Each session consists of:

Case Study. Participants review real life situations as a means of learning how to identify issues objectively, set attainable goals, propose solutions, and solve problems.

Small Group Discussion. Guided group discussion helps participants to develop solutions to typical family situations and challenges in an informal setting where they can learn from each other and form friendships with like minded parents.

An Informative Presentation. Participants are provided with information and guidelines to apply to their personal situations.
